Is it possible to block VivoPlay?

2019/06/28

Hi there, Molly! First of all we should tell you that VivoPlay is a simple mobile phone and it actually looks like a watch. But despite its small size it has a pretty wide connectivity, it has a GSM compatibility, Wi-Fi and GPS module and a strong battery. Also it has a rubbered shell, it will be really hard for your kids to damage the device in any way. But we at Jammer-Store can tell you that anything that uses radio frequencies to transmit data can be blocked. Now let's find out how the device works. It uses its GPS module for finding its location and geofencing. There are rumors that device will use Google Maps Geolocation API. You can install an application for your smartphone that will allow you to define the area where your kid is allowed to enter or not. If your kid leaves the fenced area you will be notified and his location will be visible on the map in this application. Also if there is a trouble your child may use a panic button. It will make VivoPlay to dial 5 predefined phone numbers so he or she will probably get help. Wi-Fi and GSM module will be able to help if the device is indoor, cell tower triangulation and Wi-Fi navigation will be used. But you should keep in mind that each of those features can be easily blocked one by one, but it will be really hard to block all three communication frequencies at once, it will require a very specific signal jammer, which is pretty rare and hard to get. Thanks for your question, I hope I've managed to help.
