Paranoia on Office

2019/12/01

Hi there, Hummel. Such a privacy problems are spreading really wide, because brasses try to control every aspect of life of their employees rather frequently. Such auto trackers are used not only for tracking employees, some insurance companies also use them to monitor driving of their clients so the problem you have described is really urgent and important. First of all it is necessary to know how that whole thing works. Those trackers may have different configurations and look different too, but the way they work is always the same. They use GPS frequencies to determine vehicle's coordinates and speed. Some models may also have built-in accelerometers and fuel sensors. Then they transmit all the gathered data to a central monitoring server via GSM standard, which uses 900/1800 MHz frequency in Europe and 850/1900 MHz in US, Canada and Latin America. Also those trackers are able to determine raw coordinates using cell tower triangulation, that's why some models may work in areas, where GPS is usually unavailable, like underground tunnels or big parking lots. That's probably the main reason why it is really hard to avoid such a tracking, but it will be possible with our universal GPS/GSM signal jammer. That device will block both GSM and GPS signals and will hide you from tracking. Also, nobody will know that you are using a jamming device, because it will look like you're simply out of cell service coverage. Thanks for your question, I hope I've managed to help.
